

Hi Nat!

I try to help everyone I can.

Gary, Safia, Johanne, Deborah, Andy, Chris and others are people I see as being 'underdogs.' They do not have the mental and physical capacities to thrive in this world and I feel a compulsion to help them.

Justin and you to me are different - way different. You are both super intelligent and motivated. I love that! Justin is easy to help - as his desires all fall into a confined area - he wants to work in renovations and construction. I know people in these fields and can easily assist him - and it is my pleasure and honour to do so.

You are way different. Your talents and interests are diverse. You are a nurse, an incredible cook, a dressmaker, an artist - and with great ideas and desires to be everywhere - right away! You said your Dad was a 'jack of all trades' - well, so am I - I can't just be doing one thing. I actually think when your career is fully mature - you will be doing many things also. But right now you already have a lot on your plate. First and foremost you have Chris - and settling everything around him so that you are stable and always have someone to look after him - in school, before and after school and in the evenings/on weekends as the case may present itself. Then you have all your court cases. This is not just physical energy it zaps - it is also mental and emotional. Then you have your profession - and your needing to get those required hours done in nursing so that you don't have to go back to school.

You are 38 years old - well almost 39! The one thing you have lots of is time! Today Justin said to me - 'I know I will be a success!' Success is defined differently by every person. To me success is being able to live in love the vast majority of your days. It has nothing to do with how much a person earns/makes. But with that said - I don't believe - I know you will be a success - monetarily. I know you will get back to being a great nurse and being loved by all your patients. I know you will have a restaurant (with Sebastian!), I know you will go on to write a book (several/many?!) and transform it into an audiobook - your book - not someone else's, I know you will have a part-time career as an amazing wedding dressmaker, I know you will create great works of art which will adorn important spaces in people's homes and offices who love your work.

You are very special, Nat - and loved deeply by God. I know things feel difficult and even at times impossible - but your salvation is just around the corner. Keep being your best in every moment and try to live your life in love - always.

All my love,
